To-morrow—Increased Output.

Work will be resumed to-morrow morning in the Handook tobacco factory which has been closed for several days, pending the transfer to the Rucker & Witten Company, of Martinsville.

The inventory was completed yesterday, the deal has been ratified and the money will pass hands this week. The purchase price approximates $100,000.

The plant will be managed by Mr. W. T. Hancock, who becomes a director in the Martinsville Company.

The output during the first year will be about 1,000,000 pounds and eventually will be developed until, it reaches 2,000,000 pounds or more. The capacity of the plant is about $,000 pounds and eventually will be developed until, it reaches 2,000,000 pounds or more. The capacity of the plant is about $,000 pounds a day.

Both Mr. Rucker and Mr. Witten have been in this city for several days. When seen last night they made vigorous deminis of the report that they are being backed up by the trust. It was stated emphatically by Mr. Rucker that no one connected with his company is in any way directly or indirectly interested in the trust and vice versa, that no one attached to the American Tobacco Company or any of the allied concerns owns a dollar of stock in the Rucker & Witten Company.

A CHICAGO GAME OF POKER

In Which the Man Who Planned to Do the Cheating Was the Loser in the End.

er had served us and gone, he said:
"Twe been watching you for a couple of weeks, and I've sized you up for a pretty good poker player."

"'But,' he said, 'that needn't stop you, if you'll play in with me. I'll stake you to chips, and we can sattle after the game. You get enough out of it, anyhow, to keep you going, and a share of the winnings. We can't lose if you follow my signals, and I never have more than four in the game.'

four in the game."
"Well, just naturally, I knew enough about poker to know that he was pretty near right, but I never had played a crooked card up to that time, and I wasn't quite ready to fall. Besides, it seemed suspicious that he should pick me out for such a proposition, and I told him 40.

wasn't quite ready to fall. Besides, it seemed suspicious that he should pick me out for such a proposition, and I told him so.

"His face darkened a little, but he said he hadn't been long in Chicago himself, and there wasn't a man in the bunch he would trust. And then he went on to tell me that a man named Phelps had agreed to come to his room the next night with a friend, and he wanted me to sit in for a four hand.

"I thought about it for a minute, and then declared myself in. My notion was that I'd see what his game really was, and then use my own judgment about going on. Bo we had another bottle and went up to his room to practice on his signal code. I was ready for the education, anyhow.

"Well, we sat till near daybreak, practising, but, aside from learning his signals so that I could give 'em or take 'em as well as he could, I didn't get anything new from him. He was a silok dealer, all right, and he could place the cards pretty near where he wanted them, but he told me frankly that he was afraid to take chances on dealing, as he knew that Phelps was a whole lot shrewd and was likely to watch too closely.

"But before we got through that night he and I could tell each other's hands without much chance of any third party suspecting anything. Of course, with that advantage we could tell when to bolsew each other up, and it did look bad for Phelps and his friend, for sure.

"The next night, just after dinner, if me may night, just after dinner, if thought you were going to play poker?" I said. "If it's going to be a same of mumblepeg, I'll call it oft."

"His face darkened again. I didn't like his face. And he wanted to know what I considered money, I told him five hundred was enough to show, for I didn't reckon the jackpots would run over sid for the first half hour, and I calculated on having enough of the Phelps money by that time to go on. So, finally, he pseled off the five from a roll that made my eyes water.

"When I went into Bannigan's room I had shout three minds as to what I was

"It wasn't any part of my plan to make any more—that is any more than one—for I played along for three or four more pots till I caught him again in just the same sort of a way, only I got more money out of it.

"Then, with about $1,200 winnings, besides the $500 I had got from him to sit in with, I pushed my chips over to him and shoved the bills in my pocket, sayling:

ing:
"I think I'll cash in. My luck is too

"I think I'll cash in. My luck is too good to last."

"I thought for a moment he would have a fit, but still he didn't dare to say anything in front of the two others, so he counted out the money, and as I started out of the room, after saying good night, he said suddenly, 'Oh, I want to speak to you a moment,' and he followed me out into the hall.

"I faced him, and said, 'What is it?' and as I expected, he put out his hand for the money. So we had it out right there.

"If you open your mouth,' I said, 'I'll blow the game. I don't think you want those men in there to know that you were trying to swindle them.'

"You can't tell 'em that,' he said, by way of a bluff, 'without telling them you way of a bluff, 'without telling them you were in it.'

"But I wasn't in it,' I said. 'I went into the game to de you up, and I've done it. And it's up to you to pooket a loss." 'And he did it. I expected a shooting scrape or a hard fight at the least, but he had sense enough to see that he had nothing to gain and everything to lose, and he gave me a game of talk that lasted se long that the other two men came out in the hall and, of dourse, stopped the talk. Then I started up stairs for my room and they went back into his.

for my room and they went back into his.

"I didn't go to my room, though. I came down another flight of stairs and took the first train for New York. On the train I wrote back to the hotel for my baggage, and I also did some figuring on the game.

"I reckoned up, as nearly as I could, just what I had taken from Phelps and Davis on those two hands and when Davis came back home I hunted him up and tried to give him the money.

"He wouldn't take it, though. He said that he and Phelps had wom over $3,000 from Bannigan after I left and wera perfectly satisfied."—N. Y. Sun.

WHAT TO PUT IN PARKS

By MRS. HERMAN J. HALL,

Past President Woman's Auxiliary, American Park and Outdoor Art Associa'n

In these days of awasening visual sense when the masses are studying beauty in the concrete and abstract, it is well for the clitzen to consider the mission as well as the necessity of a park. Whether this portion of "God's country, on the boundaries of Man's town is to be preserved and enchanced as an area of vegetable growth or is to assume the varied character of a resort, is a vital question, which should have the attention of all the people instead of being relegated to a committee. This sentiment, however, should be governed by the scientific plan made by an expert as the foundation for all development.

If the park is intended as a lovely natural retreat from business, domestic or social cares, as well as a panacea for mental and physical aliments, the citizen should emphatically object to the presence or introduction of objects antagonistic to their purpose. For this reason, all forms of architecture out of harmony with American scenery, such as Esyptian temples, Chinese pugodas or jig-saw logglas, should be avoided and only such styles adopted as conform with the general character of our best and inost typical architecture, and moreover are subservient in line, mass and color to the surrounding natural growths.

All soulptural decoration directly within the park should be connected with buildings, bridges, entrances or viaducts, and their design should conform to the first principle of all fine parks—restruness and spivan charm, The only sculptural monument suitable to these precincts are fountains and grottos. Pleasing types of these features may be found in the children's fountain at the entrance of the new park in Barcelona, Spain. No more joyous or uplifting suggestion could be offered to the tired soul which seeks recreation than this group of happy younstens. They are the admiration of every visitor to these gardens.

Of all the errors perpetrated by an unthinking public none is greater than the effort to house or confine wild birds or animals in a climate foreign to their natures. Born in capiti

Sweet is the stene when virtue dies.
When sinks a righteous soul to rost;
How mildly beam the closing eyes.
How gently heaves the expanding breast. "Amiable, she won all; intelligent, she charmed all; fervent, she loved all, and dead, she saddened all."
